BROWN RUDNICK ESTABLISHES INTERNATIONAL CLEANTECH TEAM

Law firm is able to address the full spectrum of legal issues and business opportunities to help advance emerging clean technology sector

Boston, MA, June 5, 2008 – Brown Rudnick, a premier international law firm, today announced that it has established a Cleantech Team to serve the needs of companies and investors involved in renewable, sustainable, and environmentally safe technologies. Drawing from a robust complement of interdisciplinary knowledge, background and perspective, Brown Rudnick is able to address the full spectrum of cleantech issues and opportunities on an international scale.

Brown Rudnick's international Cleantech Team pools talent from a number of the Firm's established practice groups, among them: Energy, Climate, Corporate & Emerging Growth, Corporate Finance, Structured Finance, Intellectual Property, Environmental, Government Relations, and Tax. Consequently, the Cleantech Team comprises attorneys and professionals who are experienced in matters involving:

- energy law and regulatory considerations
- access to sources of capital
- corporate finance activities
- mergers and acquisitions
- public and private securities offerings
- commercialization of IP assets
- securitization of technology patent portfolios
- licensing relationships, in-bound and outbound
- joint ventures and strategic alliances
- sales and distribution arrangements
- R&D and manufacturing agreements
- UNFCCC and Kyoto mechanisms
- carbon and emissions trading regimes
- monetization of greenhouse gas emission credits
- CDM and JI mechanisms
- carbon emissions funds
- project finance
- government relations and political advocacy
- renewable project incentives
- tax strategies and issues, including production tax credits
